Course content: You will complete the twelve modules listed below. The first five 10-credit modules cover the theoretical basis of forensic psychology across a range of settings, through all stages of the criminal justice process, i.e. from investigation to punishment and through care, and as applied to a broad range of crimes. A double (20-credit) module provides an overview of a key aspect of forensic practice, risk assessment and the associated risk management of offenders. Two further 10-credit modules are particular features of this course and explore the legal process (taught by the Coventry Law School), and practice and application in forensic psychology (involving a number of guest speakers who are practitioners in forensic settings). The latter module is delivered in a four day intensive teaching block in June that provides students with a variety of teaching delivery styles. Two modules (30 credits) cover advanced research methods including both quantitative and qualitative methods, and a further 10 credit module focusing on study skills and project planning prepares students for the final module (50 credits), which is an independent research dissertation/project.

Choosing your route: The MSc emphasises a taught focus across a range of methods and will be suitable for students keen to develop a broad profile of independent research skills. The MRes places a greater emphasis on independent study and is suitable for students who are already engaged in psychological research and wish to focus on a particular area. The innovative course structure means you don't need to decide which award you want to focus on until the end of Term One.

Term One: In Term One, all full-time MSc and MRes students complete the same core modules, which cover:

- Advanced Experimentation and Statistics (One)
- Psychometrics (One): Developing Psychometric Scales Development in Research and Practice
- Qualitative Research Design and Analysis (One)
- Research and Professional Skills (One)
- Observational Methods

Term Two: In Term Two, students pursuing the MSc award will complete five more taught modules. MRes students complete just two modules of their choice, allowing them to concentrate exclusively on quantitative / psychometric methods or qualitative methods. You also complete a larger empirical research project (worth 100 credits) under the supervision of a research active member of staff.

- Advanced Experimentation and Statistics (Two)
- Psychometrics (Two): Developing Psychometric Scales Development in Research and Practice
- Research and Professional Skills (Two)

- Qualitative Research Design and Analysis (Two)
- Testing Psychological Theories using SEM
- Specialist Psychological Research Methods Essay (MSc only)
- Psychology Research Project
